Nush Lewis is a versatile multi-instrumentalist, composer and singer-songwriter based in Mumbai, India. Having trained in the piano in her childhood and since then extensively in the harp, she has completed her performance course in the harp from one of the finest institutes in the country, the KM Conservatory, Chennai.

Donning multiple hats, as a composer, she's collaborated with producer Ayan De in 2014 and released her debut EP "Fused", which was critically acclaimed. With moody, pensive compositions, combined with a unique production ethos, her musicality can best be described as minimal acoustic, with intricate melodic lines set upon ephemeral soundscapes. Having multiple performance modules, as a solo act, band, and as part of multiple collaborative efforts, her performances showcase these encapsulating creations.

An avid advocate for music and the arts, in 2017, Nush started her own arts education company, OffSet. An independent art property, Offset was created to directly support arts education and creative development with support from their respective industries, and has been generating tremendous support since its inception. She has also been a faculty member at Furtados School of Music and was part of the Curriculum Development and Outreach department at the TrueSchool of Music.
